10. Commission Comments/Questions

Commissioner Moore:

I would like to welcome Commissioner Fung to the Planning Commission. Thank you for joining us.

Commissioner Fung:

Thank you.

Commissioner Richards:

I second that. I can't wait to work with you, Commissioner Fung and now you'll get to experience what it's like when we send something to the Board of Appeals and it gets altered. I do have some other comments though. It's just tongue-in-cheek, of course. I've mentioned last week about the quote by Richard Rothstein in the LA Times about the fact that adding more housing is not going to help communities of concern because the people in the communities can't actually afford the housing. I don't know if you recall that or not. And then I was a little bit floored this week on the Sunday New York Times on the front page, there was an article called "The Neighborhood's Black. The new Home Buyers are White". And it talked about diversity and the two kinds of diversity and they said there is unstable diversity and stable diversity. Stable diversity is where minorities move to the suburbs and they get a mortgage and they, along with their peer groups out in the suburbs, earn the same amount of money. So, they are rooted in the community and they're invested in the community and they're equal. It's equitable because they all afford the same house, they all got a mortgage. However, the reverse is true when white folks move into black neighborhoods. They create unstable diversity. And interestingly enough, from the article, there's a graph, if you look online and I'll send to Secretary Lonin the link because there's an interactive graph. It says, "It's far more rare in America that neighborhoods have become more diverse because they have shifted from the left to the distribution towards the center." Meaning white folks move into black neighborhoods rather than black folks moving in to white neighborhoods. "In other words, because white residents have moved into neighborhoods where predominantly African-American and Hispanics live. Our project at the New York town is focused on the small but growing number of places experiencing such change. There are about 1400 such census tracks". Remember, we're dealing with, like SB 50 there's only one census track, not the Mission, it's census tracks within the Mission. So, you may have a census track to cross the street from a census track that is included in the community of concern and some that aren't. As I read the amendments to SB 50 yesterday. "There are about 1400 such tracks in America that have changed that way since the year 2000, home to nearly five million people. That's a relatively small share of all neighborhoods but these places embody a deep tension at the geographic center of many cities. White households that have historically avoided black neighborhoods, in particular, show a growing willingness to live in those neighborhoods. Many scholars would say that that's a mark of progress. However, but with the arrival of these white households who have on an average much higher incomes than the residents around them, tends to unleash rapid change in the housing market that can threaten long-time homeowners and especially renters. The economic reality runs head-first into the desires of some residence and city officials to build more diverse and equitable communities. In many neighborhoods the market forces are simply more powerful." So, this whole idea about global capital and market force and how it would actually shapes and affects folks who are moving into neighborhoods and gentrifying them really has been borne out by what the New York Times actually had in on Sunday. And I would encourage anybody to actually have the time to take a look and read it. And I know we're going to be talking about CASA later, but in terms of, you know, taking a pause on communities or census tracts, market forces and community planning. There's going to have to be a really strong counter balance to market force. It's basically saying that market forces you can't really counter them. They're just overwhelming. So, very very interesting article on Sunday, in the New York Times on the front page.

D. DEPARTMENT MATTERS

11. Director's Announcements

John Rahaim, Planning Director:

Thank you, Jonas. Good afternoon, Commissioners. Commissioner Fung, welcome back to the Planning Commission. It's great to have you. On behalf of the Department, we look forward to working with you very much. Secondly, a couple of hearings -- a couple of the past hearings, you've heard comments about a project on 18th Street, on the Castro and some potential for enforcement action. We have indeed found that there's potential action on that project that the Department needs to take. So, we will be bringing that to you in the next few weeks to deal with that issue, as well. I can't remember the exact address I'm sorry. And thirdly, I just wanted to tell you and related to an item that's coming up shortly. There was the last of several meetings yesterday that I sat on, with Ken Rich representing the City on the MTC ABAG Legislative Committee that is reviewing all the State legislation. We plowed through another five or six pieces of legislations yesterday in a four-hour meeting. The MTC ABAG staff has done an incredible job of analyzing these legislations. The committee is not taking a position but rather all comments are being recorded and those comments will be passed on to the boards of the MTC Commission and the ABAG Board to consider when they take a position on all these bills which is coming up over the next month or six weeks or so. So, again when we have time and more detail, I can talk about some of the detailed comments, but in general there was a pretty broad diversity of comments from the committee about many of these pieces of legislation. Obviously, SB 50 listed a lot of comments but many of the other bills did, too. Particularly the one related to the regional affordable housing entity that is proposed on one of the bills and several others as well, which we can get into more detail. But I just wanted to report to you that those meetings are largely wrapped up. We are holding a time at the end of May to kind of have a final meeting, if needed, to review changes to any of the bills. That concludes my comments. Thank you.

Commissioner Richards:

So, one question. I know we're going to review CASA today and I don't know whether there's 12 or 15 bills. But you said last week or two weeks ago, there's like 36 substantial bills. Will we be able to have an understanding with the other, the balance of those are?

John Rahaim, Planning Director:

Yeah. I can, I forgot to do that. I can pass on the -- there's a kind of a spreadsheet of the 36 that the MTC/ABAG staff has looked at in somewhat more detail and I can get that for you.

Commissioner Richards:

Great. Thank you.

Tim Frye, Preservation Officer:

Good afternoon, Commissioners. Tim Frye, department staff. Here to share with you a little about yesterday's Historic Preservation Commission hearing. Also, a very short hearing where the Commission provided Review and Comment and a Recommendation of Approval to the pending Castro Cultural District. The only suggested amendment that the HPC made was to include the Historic Preservation Commission as a partner and technical advisor to the community as needed, as they move through a process of developing the Cultural Heritage Strategy report. That concludes my report unless you have any questions. Thanks.

Commissioner Richards:

Mr. Starr, was there a second read on the appeal on the Folsom, was it 1060 Folsom Street? The one that shadowed the Victoria Manalo Draves Park with the findings?

Aaron Starr:

Yeah. That --

Commissioner Richards:

So, it was up -- officially upheld?

Aaron Starr:

Yes. It was.

Commissioner Richards:

Thanks.

Aaron Starr:

It -- no I think it was last week. I can find the exact date but --

Commissioner Richards:

Okay thanks.

Commissioner Moore:

Mr. Frye, there was several Legacy Business applications pending before the HPC. Could you comment on those please?

Tim Frye, Preservation Officer:

I have no comment on those unfortunately. But it is a fairly common practice every hearing the Commission does provide its recommendation to a number of Legacy Businesses. I, unfortunately, don't have the list in front of me today but I believe there were anywhere between five and six businesses that were proposed. And they all received unanimous approval to move on to the Small Business Commission.

Jonas P. Ionin, Commission Secretary:

I think the one you're interested in, the Leavenworth project. The grocery store with the rooftop garden was approved.

Commissioner Moore:

Thank you.
