Business Description

The Old Ship Saloon is the oldest known bar to still be operating in San Francisco and may be one of the oldest bars on the West Coast. Opened by Englishman Joe Anthony in 1851, the Old Ship Saloon is in its original location at the corner of Pacific Avenue and Battery Street. After 170 years in business, the Saloon has a long, storied history that almost outspans the State of California itself. Despite such a lengthy operation period, the Old Ship Saloon (or “Old Ship Ale House” as it was first known, followed by subsequent name changes) has a well-documented and fascinating history, starting with its inception as a shipwreck-turned-ale house during the Gold Rush period. The bar would later become a refuge for fire victims in 1859 and then a Barbary Coast icon as a bar and part-time brothel, operating for 9 years out of the ship’s landlocked hull. When the ship’s remains were finally swallowed by the area’s muddy terrain (which was the shoreline at that time, before it was covered with landfill), a wooden structure was erected to continue operations. After the 1906 earthquake, the brick-and-mortar building we see today was constructed with burnt bricks salvaged from the area. During Prohibition, the Saloon became the Toscano Hotel and Monte Carlo Café, but the main floor was converted back to a bar once provision restrictions were lifted. The upper floors persist as “Single Room Occupancy” (SRO) units, converted over from the former hotel rooms. The Old Ship Saloon has weathered many turbulent storms in San Francisco's history and has been able to stay afloat throughout its ever-changing tides. The business is an anchor to its community, as well as a living artifact and testament to the neighborhood's long-desired need to gather and relax at their local pub. The Old Ship Saloon is a family-owned business, and the applicants are committed to maintaining the features and characteristics of the business that make it so iconic and recognizable. The bar has been featured in several books and countless news outlets, including (but not limited to) the San Francisco Chronicle, Daily Alta, San Francisco Examiner, SFist, and San Francisco Eater. The managing staff of the Old Ship Saloon are active and offer meeting space for the local neighborhood association, Barbary Coast Association, and the Jackson Square Merchant association.

The business's location at 298 Pacific Avenue is a Category A (Historic Resource Present) structure on the northeast corner of Pacific Avenue and Battery Street, in the Financial District neighborhood. It is within a C-2 (Community Business) Zoning District and a 84-E Height and Bulk District, as well as the Northeast Waterfront Planning Area and the Washington-Broadway Special use District. 298 Pacific Avenue was included in several historic resource surveys, including the Here Today Survey and publication (1968, pg. 284), the Planning Department Survey (1976), and the Foundation for San Francisco Architectural heritage survey (1978), where it was identified as having "Major Importance.”

City Hall, Room 110
1 Dr. Carlton B. Goodlett Place
San Francisco, CA 94102

Dear Director Dick-Endrizzi,

It is my honor and privilege to nominate the Old Ship Saloon for inclusion on the Legacy Business Registry.

The Old Ship Saloon is one of San Francisco’s oldest and most historic bars, having opened for business aboard the land-locked Gold Rush sailing ship The Arkansas in 1851. It occupied the corner of Battery and Pacific streets during the bawdy days of the Barbary Coast and was broken up for salvage in 1857. Subsequently, it opened in a two-story brick building which was severely damaged in the aftermath of the 1906 earthquake. A three-story brick building went up on the site in 1907 and a bar has operated there ever since. Remains of the actual “old ship” were unearthed in 2016 during construction of an adjacent condominium development.

Not only does The Old Ship Saloon serve as an ad hoc community gathering spot and respite for the many residents and workers in the area, it also hosts organized meetings for neighborhood groups such as the Barbary Coast Neighborhood Association. In addition to a full bar, it has a hearty food menu and in normal times operates until 2 a.m. daily, providing a welcome beacon of hospitality in an area where many businesses close early and/or on weekends.

The Old Ship Saloon would greatly benefit from inclusion on the Legacy Business Registry, and it is my honor to nominate it for inclusion.

Sincerely,

Aaron Peskin

OLD SHIP SALOON
Section 4: Written Historical Narrative

a. Provide a short history of the business from the date the business opened in San Francisco to the present day, including the ownership history. For businesses with multiple locations, include the history of the original location in San Francisco (including whether it was the business's founding and or headquartered location) and the opening dates and locations of all other locations.

The Old Ship Saloon, located at 298 Pacific Avenue, is a rare historic business that witnessed the birth of the city of San Francisco, survived the earthquake and fire of 1906, and still operating today. The bar started as “Old Ship Ale House,” experienced several name and address changes, and is today known as “Old Ship Saloon.”

Although the business was established in 1851, the legacy of the Old Ship Saloon begins in 1849 with the launch of the ship called the Arkansas that epitomizes the story of San Francisco’s transformation. In June of 1849, the Arkansas left New York Harbor with 206 passengers and crew. UC Berkeley has preserved Robert Ferrell’s personal diary of the trip, describing a firsthand account of the Arkansas as it battled storms around the horn of South America, and fought winter swells up the western coast. Though they arrived safely in San Francisco Bay, Ferrell chronicles the tragic ending of the Arkansas. An overnight storm trapped the Captain and crew and blew the ship off its anchor, smashing upon an island now known as Alcatraz. The next day, the Arkansas was run aground parallel to Pacific Street, and adjacent to the current building that houses The Old Ship Saloon.

Like countless California Gold Rush ships, the Arkansas was abandoned where it lay, but even in death it added to the fabric of the city: It’s cargo of bricks became a building on Kearny street; the missionaries it disgorged populated a silver-mining town in Nevada; its captain joined the police force and became a judge; and its cabin boy James Laflin became one of the most prolific “Shanghai-ers” in history.

In 1851, an Englishman named Joe Anthony cut a hole into the abandoned ship from the Pacific Street side, laid down a ramp, and opened The Old Ship Ale House in its hull. What began as a sailor’s saloon and part-time brothel would evolve into a Barbary coast legend, operating for nine years out of the land-locked hulk.

The scuttled Arkansas functioned as a store-ship with the saloon and brothel operating out of its land-locked remains, then later provided shelter to fire victims in 1859. When the ship was finally swallowed by mud, its spine was added to the fill that extended the San Francisco coastline, and the neighborhood of Jackson Square would literally be built upon its back.

Many of San Francisco’s oldest businesses have changed their address, name, and housing due to progress, fire, and earthquakes. Joe Anthony began an unbroken line of Old Ship owners, anchoring the business to the corner of Pacific and Battery streets, floating with the changing tides of the ever-changing landscape in the city. What began as a saloon and brothel housed in an abandoned ship would become a wood building, and eventually a cornerstone brick structure.

Henry Klee purchased the American Hotel and revived the name of The Old Ship Saloon in 1897. The destruction following the 1906 earthquake and fires forced Klee to rebuild the brick-and-mortar bar and boarding house above. Forged from fire-scorched bricks pulled from neighborhood rubble, the Old Ship Saloon was edified in a famous aerial photo of the lone building standing amidst absolute devastation in 1907. The current building was completed steps from the final resting place of the Arkansas herself.

b. Describe any circumstances that required the business to cease operations in San Francisco for more than six months?

The Old Ship Saloon has never ceased operations for more than six months, including during Prohibition where it operated as Toscano Hotel and Monte Carlo Café.

Surviving the pandemic in 2020 has proven a challenge, but the year unfurled its significance to San Francisco as an institution and the owners’ responsibility as custodians of the Old Ship Saloon. During the early stages of the shelter-in-place order, several weeks of uncertainty and unrest plagued the community as much as the virus. Residents and businesses fled the neighborhood in due course. However, essential workers like firefighters and contractors needed sustenance, and Old Ship Saloon decided to open as soon as possible. With a few employees and the decision to serve the present community, the owners began to realize two things: the business is a beacon for the neighborhood at large, and the employees need to work. The Old Ship Saloon has undoubtedly been financially impaired by the pandemic, and it will take several year to recuperate, but what has surfaced as a result of the shelter-in-place order is how important community is to this neighborhood, from basic needs to companionship and providing support for Old Ship Saloon’s employees.

c. Is the business a family-owned business? If so, give the generational history of the business.

Old Ship Saloon is a family-owned business. The current ownership is brothers Eric Passetti and Marc Passetti.

e. When the current ownership is not the original owner and has owned the business for less than 30 years, the applicant will need to provide documentation of the existence of the business prior to current ownership to verify it has been in operation for 30+ years. Please use the list of supplemental documents and/or materials as a guide to help demonstrate the existence of the business prior to current ownership.

Documentation of the existence of the business verifying it has been in operation for 30+ years is provided in this Legacy Business Registry application.

f. Note any other special features of the business location, such as, if the property associated with the business is listed on a local, state, or federal historic resources registry.

The historic resource status of the building of the building that houses Old Ship Saloon is classified by the Planning Department as Category A, with regard to the California Environmental Quality Act. The substantial brick building was constructed in 1907 after the earthquake and fire and is historically registered by San Francisco. The building recalls gold rush days when vessels were pulled up on the muddy foreshores and used for commerce. It is considered to relate to the ship Arkansas, which was beached nearby and converted to an English ale house in 1850.

a. Describe the business's contribution to the history and/or identity of the neighborhood, community or San Francisco.

The Old Ship Saloon has operated continuously for 170-years, from the hull of an abandoned ship to a brick building surrounded by the heights of modern progress. “The bar was built upon the ruins of a Gold Rush-era ship, the Arkansas, which ran aground on ‘Bird Island’ (aka Alcatraz) in 1849. The ship was hauled to what was then the shore in the Barbary Coast waterfront of SF. Eventually it was covered with landfill, and the building that now houses Old Ship was constructed above it.”¹

The saloon has been a place of respite, relief, relaxation, and rejuvenation for dock workers, masons, printing press operators, candy factory workers, advertising professionals, lawyers, politicians, and radio and television anchorpeople. To this day, the Old Ship Saloon continues to feed and invigorate its community. The lasting impact on the history of San Francisco is that of a bar that has anchored its neighborhood since the neighborhood itself first landed on these shores. And though Tadich Grill may lay claim as the oldest restaurant in San Francisco, there is not another bar or saloon with an older lineage than The Old Ship Saloon.

b. Is the business (or has been) associated with significant events in the neighborhood, the city, or the business industry?

Old Ship Saloon is actively involved with the Barbary Coast Neighborhood Association (BCNA) and Jackson Square Merchants Association (JSMA). The business dates back to the establishment of the city of San Francisco in 1850, so it is associated with all significant events in the city’s history from the California Gold Rush to the 2020-21 coronavirus pandemic.

c. Has the business ever been referenced in an historical context? Such as in a business trade publication, media, or historical documents?

Old Ship Saloon has been referenced in countless newspaper articles in publications including, but not limited to, the San Francisco Chronicle, Daily Alta, San Francisco Examiner, SFist, and San Francisco Eater.

The bar has also been featured in several books, including Shanghaied in San Francisco by Bill Pickelhaupt; Gold Rush Port by James P. Delgado; and Men and Memories of San Francisco In the “Spring of ’50” [1873] by T.A. (Theodore August) Barry.

d. Is the business associated with a significant or historical person?

One of its first bartenders at Old Ship Saloon was James (Jim) Laflin, who departed from New York on the Arkansas as a cabin boy. Jim became one of the most prolific “Shanghaiers” in history, also known as “campions” or “camps.” “Shanghaiing or crimping is the practice of kidnapping people to serve as sailors by coercive techniques such as trickery, intimidation, or violence.”\(^2\) Jim was notorious in San Francisco, dying rich and infamous after a 50-year career as a Shanghai artist.

Another crimper associated with Old Ship Saloon was James Kelly, better known as "Shanghai Kelly.” A legendary figure in San Francisco history, he wore a red beard and had a fiery temper to match. He regularly kidnapped men and forced them to work on understaffed ships. Shanghai Kelly kept a boarding house in San Francisco. Local bars like the Old Ship Saloon provided Kelly with a steady supply of victims. In the early 1870s, Kelly was reported to have shanghaied 100 men for three understaffed ships in a single evening by announcing he was hosting a free booze cruise to celebrate his "birthday," and to say "thank you" to his fellow crimps and runners who had helped him through the years. After leaving port, his bartenders served opium-laced whiskey to his guests, who were then offloaded to the waiting ships.\(^3\)

e. How does the business demonstrate its commitment to the community?

Single Room Occupancy (SRO) residents are above the saloon. Old Ship Saloon frequently feeds and/or employs the residents of these rooms, formerly the "hotel" and "boarding house" of the Barbary Coast era. The Old Ship Saloon also employees underserved or under-represented citizens of the world such as Altynai Raeva who resides in the Bay Area on an Amnesty Visa from Kyrgyzstan and is currently studying at UC Berkeley. Additionally, ex-convicts have called this saloon home. In short, the Old Ship Saloon welcomes any and all who wish to imbibe and peddle a living. Management staff serve on the Jackson Square Merchant Association and provide meeting locations for all neighborhood associations such as the Barbary Coast Neighborhood Association.

f. Provide a description of the community the business serves.

Old Ship Saloon serves dock workers, masons, advertising professionals, accountants, lawyers, politicians, radio and television workers, tech workers, and anchor people. The Old Ship Saloon serves the greater public from all over the Bay Area and in many instances tourists from all over the world.

g. Is the business associated with a culturally significant building/structure/site/object/interior?

The current ownership wanted to pay homage to the Old Ship Saloon’s past and various iterations. There are signs from two past businesses that once occupied the space, Babe’s Monte Carlo and Bricks Bar and Grill. There are also original photos of the Old Ship Saloon run by Henry Klee. The current ownership recently recreated the original photos with current staff for generations to come after they are gone.

h. How would the community be diminished if the business were to be sold, relocated, shut down, etc.?

If the Old Ship Saloon were to close, San Francisco would lose its oldest continuously operating bar location, possessing considerable detail of the history of the Gold Rush and Barbary Coast era. Given its rich history, closure would be “a San Francisco tragedy of epic proportions.”

CRITERION 3

a. Describe the business and the essential features that define its character.

The essential features that describe the businesses character are its literal location, predating any surrounding business or structure. The business continues to operate as it was originally intended, to service the proximal merchant and residential community.

Opaque amber transom windows shed gold light across the gloss of the mahogany bar top. Every brick-and-mortar union tells a different story of the shanghaied Barbary Coast to the business suit clad power brokers of modern commerce. Original signage from past iterations of the saloon adorns the walls with neon from Babe's Monte Carlo and Bricks Bar & Grill, paying homage to its storied past. Historical photos commemorate a bygone era in San Francisco that brings patrons back out of nostalgia and educates those new to the city. The aroma of traditional Old English pub fare fills the room as the commissary dings the bell, telling the barkeeper fish & chips are ready and the burger is hot as the crisp clink of ice falling into glass and the shake of a Pisco Punch satisfies another order.

Old Ship Saloon continues to serve its public unbiasedly. From local hospitality industry, marketing agents, contractors, radio personalities, and travelers alike, the saloon serves humble pub fare and classic cocktails, beer, and wine to all walks of life.

b. How does the business demonstrate a commitment to maintaining the historical traditions that define the business, and which of these traditions should not be changed in order to retain the businesses historical character? (e.g., business model, goods and services, craft, culinary, or art forms)

Old Ship Saloon is committed to maintaining its historical tradition as a bar.

c. How has the business demonstrated a commitment to maintaining the special physical features that define the business? Describe any special exterior and interior physical characteristics of the space occupied by the business (e.g. signage, murals, architectural details, neon signs, etc.).

The current ownership wanted to pay homage to the Old Ship Saloon’s past and various iterations. There are signs from two past businesses that once occupied the space, the original Babe’s Monte Carlo neon and Bricks Bar and Grill. The Clampers Historical Society commemorated the Old Ship Saloon with an honorary plaque:

"After a 178 day voyage from New York via Cape Horn in 1849 the sailing ship ‘Arkansas’ arrived in San Francisco Bay. Among her 112 passengers were 75 Methodists, all bound for the gold fields or church propagation. The ship was nearly lost while anchoring off bird island, now Alcatraz, then was towed and purposely grounded in Yerba Buena Cove. Here an entrepreneur cut a hole in her bow creating an instant saloon. The ships colorful past has included a seaman's bar, boarding house, bordello and ‘shanghai-shop.’ Yet the Old Ship has never lost its main attraction, that of a first rate saloon.

- Dedicated March 23, 6007 (2002), by Capitulus Redivivus, Yerba Buena Number One, Ancient and Honorable Order of e Clampus Vitus”

Original photos of the Old Ship Saloon run by Henry Klee connect the past with the present. The current ownership recently recreated the original photos with current staff for generations to come after they are gone.

The Old Ship Saloon is best described as a classic American Pub serving standard food such as cheeseburgers, fried chicken sandwich, and fish & chips. Classic cocktails such as the Pisco Punch and draft beers keep the bartenders moving at a quick pace.

The original brick structure erected in 1851 and rebuilt in 1907 highlights the revolutions of San Francisco’s boom and regrowth. The "Old Ship Saloon est. 1851" replicated signage on the edifice of the structure pays homage to the Gold Rush era and pre-Prohibition period of San Francisco.

d. When the current ownership is not the original owner and has owned the business for less than 30 years; the applicant will need to provide documentation that demonstrates the current owner has maintained the physical features or traditions that define the business, including craft, culinary, or art forms. Please use the list of supplemental documents and/or materials as a guide to help demonstrate the existence of the business prior to current ownership.

The UC Berkeley Library has a record of the Arkansas ship’s travel log, as well as the bar in San Francisco directories, newspaper mentions, and archeological studies. The recent construction of the adjacent condominium buildings was required to provide a historic study of the site. This information is available upon request.

Remains of Gold Rush-era ship found under San Francisco bar

But did the captain go down with it?

By Adam Brinklow  |  Updated Nov 14, 2016, 10:33am PST

It’s one of San Francisco’s most enduring local legends: That the bones of dozens of Gold Rush-era ships still rest where they sank beneath what are now the streets of the Financial District.

It also happens to be true, as the team excavating next to the venerable Old Ship Saloon confirmed a few weeks ago when they discovered something interesting beneath their site: the original old ship.

When scores of ships arrived in the bay in 1849, crews swiftly abandoned many of them, eager to give up the seafaring life for new opportunities in gold country.

Local columnist Gary Kamiya writes in his book Cool, Gray City of Love that locals often raided derelict ships for timber to build housing.

But some remained, only to eventually sink from neglect and later be buried under landfill as the city expanded its shoreline.

The Old Ship Saloon on Pacific Avenue began as a New York schooner, the Arkansas, present Old Ship owner Bill Duffy tells Curbed SF. It brought Methodist missionaries from New York, along with fortune seekers picked up along the way from New Orleans and the ports of South America.

You couldn’t find a more quintessentially San Francisco story: the East Coast, the Mississippi, and the South American coast all rolling into the bay and touching down on the Barbary Coast, the dangerous and wile locale that “turned San Francisco into more than just a freaky frontier,” as Duffy puts it.
The San Francisco Chronicle writes that the original Old Ship (which the owner simply cut a hole in the side of, added a plank, and invited miners into for a drink back in its day) probably collapsed during the 1906 earthquake, replaced by the structure you see today.

But workers excavating the lot next door for (what else?) a new condo project discovered bits and pieces of a classic ship this month—almost certainly the Arkansas.

According to Hoodline, the most significant part of the wreckage pulled up was the ship’s false keel, a bit of timber strapped onto the real keel to protect it.

Which is ironic, since it now seems possible that in the end the false keel fared better than the actual one.

After some consideration of what to do with it, workers buried the Old Ship parts once again, perhaps to wait another 110 years for curious shovels to next come prying.

Old Ship Saloon, one of the oldest bars in San Francisco, has opened its doors in Jackson Square once more, following a change of hands and brief remodel. It’s the best case scenario for the historic watering hole, which narrowly escaped closure after the owner and landlord Bill Duffy announced his intention to retire last year.

The bar was built upon the ruins of a Gold Rush-era ship, the Arkansas, which ran aground on “Bird Island” (aka Alcatraz) in 1849. The ship was hauled to what was then the shore in the Barbary Coast area of SF. Eventually it was covered with landfill, and the building that now houses Old Ship was constructed above it. Closure would have been a San Francisco tragedy of epic proportions, given its rich history.
Luckily a group of (mostly) anonymous bar and restaurant owners, led by Marc Bruschera and Eric Pasetti under the name Beware of Bird Island, banded together to save the saloon, which Duffy purchased in 1992.

It was a labor of love and preservation— one of the main goals was to retain the charm and aesthetic of the bar, while gently upgrading it. Hardwood floors have replaced the carpet and period wallpaper has been applied. Some minor kitchen updates accompany the remodel, which took place during a brief closure. Eventually patio seating will become available, depending on permits from the city.

The bar has reopened with a new menu, executed by chef Matilda McNamara. Consulting chef Erik Hopfinger helped put together a short selection of sandwiches, salads, and macaroni and cheese that includes a roast pork sandwich with garlicky rapini, Fontina cheese, and parsley salsa verde ($14). A secret menu includes truffle fries and other delights.
The cocktail list, led by barman Tim Gapchenko, is a selection of historic and simple drinks like the Gold Rush, with bourbon, lemon, and honey — named after San Francisco’s big boom as treasure-seekers flocked to the city in the mid-1800’s.

Mescal, Basil, Cucumber, Lime
In 1849, after 700 days sailing from New York, The Arizona’s high winds opened on Alcatraz, at the time sometimes referred to as Bird Island or White Island. The original name “Alcatraz” was Spanish for the “crow place” they saw - Pelicans

Babe’s Montecarlo
Vodka, Elderflower, Grapefruit, Lime
At the Babe’s and Lillian Bailey ran the bar for many years until 1984, called it Babe’s Montecarlo, but in 2011 it first became a bar when an “entrepreneur ship” mistook a hole in the side of the ship, dropped a package with a sign reading “Glad and Indif’rent spirits sold here.”

Pisco Punch
Pisco, Lemon, Pineapple, etc

Gold Rush
Bourbon, Lemon, Honey
The busiest week of transportation in the first stage for the gold fields. San Francisco, was almost a bust. By the summer of 1849, over 200,000 were registered as being anchored in the vicinity of Yerba Buena Cove - where you’re standing right now. To meet this enormous wave of new arrivals, the city began to boom as a small town of 300 grew to 25,000.

Old Ship Saloon lives on thanks to new owners

Paolo Lucchesi
Feb. 8, 2017

The owner of the Old Ship Saloon is sailing off into the sunset, but unlike an increasing number of San Francisco legacy bars that have closed in the past several years, the watering hole will live on, thanks to a new, preservation-minded ownership group.

“I guess the easiest way to explain it is that I hit the end of the road,” said Old Ship Saloon owner Bill Duffy. “This business is a real good when you're a young man, but it gets challenging when you get older.”

Duffy, 60, has been a presence behind the stick there since 1988. He bought the place in 1992, embracing the neighborhood's Barbary Coast past. The rest was, ahem, history.

Located off Jackson Square, in what was once the Barbary Coast neighborhood, the Old Ship Saloon is arguably San Francisco's oldest bar.

It's a claim that may be disputed by the Saloon in North Beach, which opened in 1861. The Old Ship’s history goes back a bit further, depending on your definition of a bar: It is built atop the ruins of the Arkansas, a Gold Rush ship that ran aground on Alcatraz in 1849. After being towed to shore, the ship got a second life as a bar in 1851. Once the ship was landlocked by landfill, a building was built on the same site, which is now the corner of Pacific Avenue and Battery Street.
Roughly a century and a half later, the Old Ship Saloon is one of the last remaining watering holes in an area that was once filled with them.

“I’ve been here since 1988, and all around the neighborhood, I’ve watched drinking and eating establishments disintegrate and die and be turned into some other use or go to high-end dining that’s inaccessible for most people,” Duffy said.

Duffy said he never formally put the bar on the market, but put the word out, so the new owners found out through grapevine.

The group includes several San Francisco bar and restaurant owners who went in on the deal together and, as of now, prefer to stay anonymous. They are doing business as a limited liability company, Beware of Bird Island — a reference to Alcatraz, and the warning sign that the Arkansas should have heeded. Names listed on the pending liquor license are Marc Bruschera and Eric Passetti.
Bartender Danny Grenolio pours a beer at Old Ship Saloon in San Francisco, Calif., is seen on Monday April 2nd, 2012.

“It’s a group of people that want to save San Francisco landmarks and don’t want to see what’s happening to Lefty O’Doul’s, the Gold Spike and all those places turning into clothing spots,” said Erik Hopfinger, a chef who will be consulting on the food side of the new Old Ship Saloon. “These are San Francisco landmarks being taken away.”

There is no set date for the changeover; both sides are waiting for the liquor license to transfer, a process that usually takes a few months. When the sale goes through, the saloon will close temporarily. Hopfinger said that during the hiatus, which is expected to last a month or so, there will be no construction, “just some lipstick and rouge.”

Duffy owns the building, so he’ll now be a landlord instead of a restaurateur. He said that he picked the new owners specifically because he wants the Old Ship’s legacy honored.

“This is a neighborhood bar,” he said. “I want this to be for people who might not be on the top floor of those office buildings.”
